

CITY ELECTION CONTEST
UNCHANGED BY DECISION

Many irregularities were testified to as having occurred at the Daly City Municipal election last April 9, when the case was resumed in the court of Judge Maxwell McNutt at Redwood City Tuesday morning of this week.

A number of witnesses asserted they had voted in precincts other than those in which they resided at the date of election. In fact, this appeared to have been a common practice at this election.

Charges in the complaint of contestants were that many illegal votes had been cast, due, in part, to negligence on the part of election officials.

Arthur Kensler testified that he voting roster, giving his residence as 242 Mirian street, but admitted he did not live there at the time of election and had not for some time previously. In answer to a query as to whom he had voted for at the municipal election, he claimed he could not remember the names of all the candidates for whom he voted. Answering a question by the court as to whether he had discussed his testimony with any person before coming into court, he denied having done so.

Louis Plansky said he lived at 56 Knowles avenue, where he is managing an apartment house owned by his father. Asked regarding one Delmar Matthews and his wife, Mrs. Matthews, who assertedly had voted at the April 9 election from that address, witness said they had moved from the apartment they had occupied at his father's house either the latter part of the year 1931 or in January, 1932, and had not resided there since that time.

Howard Johnson said he formerly lived at 401 Westlake avenue in Daly City, but moved to 556 Arch street, San Francisco, about March 5 of this year. He testified that he returned to Daly City on election day and voted for city officers, signing the roster of voters as living at the Westlake avenue address.

Harold Brown said he had resided at 119 Hillcrest drive for eighteen months and had charge of renting the four flats in that building. He testified that James Vierra had not lived in the building while he was in charge of renting. It was shown that one James Vierra had voted at the city election and had signed the voting roster as residing at 101D Hillcrest drive, which address is one of the flats in the same building.

Mrs. Rose Mareno testified that she had voted at the city election, although her husband is not a naturalized citizen of the United States, he being an Italian subject. She said she was registered by a deputy register of voters at her home.

Mrs. Estelle O'Brien testified she arrived in Daly City on January 1 of this year, having lived previously in Sausalito, Marin County. She said she registered and voted at the April 9 election, giving her address as 9 Shakespeare street, where her husband, whom she had married February 1 of this year, resided. Her testimony showed that she voted before becoming a resident of this county for the reason that she had not lived here for ninety days, as required by law.

James L. Davis, Canadian world war veteran, admitted he had taken the oath of allegiance to the king of England when he joined the Canadian army at the age of 16 years. His right to vote was questioned on his citizenship status. Davis said he was discharged from the Canadian army when it was learned he had sworn untruthfully on enlisting that he was over 18 years of age, when, in fact, he was only 16. Said he was admitted into this country upon payment of an eight dollar head tax at Vancouver, B. C.

In the case of Thomas F. Boyd, a discrepancy was shown in the registration address and the voting address.

Motion by counsel for contestants for a non-suit was denied by the court.

Superior Judge Maxwell McNutt, who is hearing the case, stated that "definite evidence of illegal voting has developed through the hearing."

The case was continued at 3 p. m. to Wednesday at 10 a. m.

Hearing of the case was resumed at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

Counsel for contestants called the following, among others, as witnesses:

Mrs. Emily Loch, who had previously testified that, while the signature on the original affidavit of registration was hers, the one signed on the roster of voters was not hers. But later she changed her testimony and stated that both signatures were written by her.

Mrs. Margaret Pettigrew, who said she had acted as a deputy registrar, stated she had called on the Williams family to register them, and that while she had gone out to her car to secure some campaign publicity matter, the affidavits had been signed, and that she could not, therefore, state definitely who had signed them. Three members of the Williams family were previously proven to have voted at the municipal election on April 9.

Mrs. Teresa Matthews was called and testified that the signature appearing on the roster of voters was written by her.

A number of persons who had acted as election officers in precincts D and F were called and testified as to their duties and conduct on election day.

Attorney Leo Friedman, for the contestants, proceeded with his summary of the case and quoted authorities to support his contention that the vote from precincts F and D be voided.

Judge McNutt said he would take the case under submission until after he had read the cases quoted by counsel as authorities and then render his decision.

Judge McNutt handed down his decision Thursday forenoon. He stated there had been a number of illegal votes cast. He held, however, the number was insufficient to prove misconduct on the part of the election officers.

Delegates of Old Glory
Auxiliary Leave For Encampment

Old Glory Auxiliary will be represented in a big way at the Fourteenth Department Encampment at San Diego this year, when our full quota of delegates will attend.

The ladies plan to leave Friday by automobile.

The delegates who will attend are: President Elsie Ireton, Myrna Hazelhurst, Charlotte Collins, Nellie Jensen, Claire Pechenino and Nora Clifton.

NOTES OF INTEREST

The ladies of the auxiliary met at the home of Mrs. Hurley for the regular meeting of the sewing circle. Those who attended were Sisters Gaitor, Bedford, Lewis, Ireton, Beckett, Erratt and Dorn. After a busy afternoon, dainty refreshments were served by the hostess.

Last Saturday a "Dutch Lunch" was given by Sister Collins at her home on Irvington street. After the many friends and members had been served a most delightful luncheon, the remainder of the afternoon was spent playing bridge and whist.

Sister Marie Gaitor was hostess at a bridge and whist party at her home on Winchester street.

The proceeds of this affair and several others given recently by members of the auxiliary will be used to help defray the expenses of sending delegates to the department encampment at San Diego.

VERDICT OF SUICIDE

An inquest into the death of Harry A. Dodge, 1223 Market street, was held at W. C. Lasswell & Co. at 10:30 o'clock Tuesday morning.

The verdict was suicide by unknown means.

The body of Dodge was found on the Skyline boulevard, a half mile south of Sharp's Park road.

The funeral was conducted from the Lasswell mortuary chapel Tuesday. Interment was in Cypress Lawn cemetery.

MAN KILLED IN
AUTO PLUNGE

Mother and Daughter Are Seriously Injured As Car Leaves Road

As the result on an automobile accident, late Saturday night, a Daly City man lost his life and his wife and their 12 year old daughter were seriously injured.

John Holmquist, driver of the car, was almost instantly killed. His wife and daughter were removed to the Community Hospital at Beresford, where they are still undergoing treatment.

Mrs. Teresa Holmquist sustained a sprained back and lacerations and both her shoulders were dislocated. She also received numerous cuts and bruises. The daughter, Margaret, was badly bruised and lacerated about the face and body.

When Constable S. A. Landini reached the scene of the accident he found a pet Pekinese dog standing in the front seat of the car, apparently unhurt, but barking furiously.

The Holmquist home is at 320 Hillside boulevard, this city.

The accident occurred on the Pedro road on the coast highway, near Rockaway Beach, near the summit of Pedro mountain. The car plunged over a 300 foot cliff.

Holmquist's remains were brought to the Lasswell & Co. undertaking establishment in this city, where an inquest was held Tuesday morning at 11:15. During the inquest it developed that the steering knuckle of the car had broken, causing the car to leap from the side of the road and over the cliff. In its descent it turned over several times before reaching the bottom.

Colma Vista Grande Aerie of Eagles, of which Holmquist was a member, held services for the deceased Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

The funeral of Mr. Holmquist was held from the mortuary chapel at 10:30 Wednesday morning. Interment was in Cypress Lawn cemetery.

HEARST TALKS OF NEWSPAPER GUILD

Solidarity movement is sweeping the country among the news writers. An organization with the name of the American Newspaper Guild has been formed. Publishers are busily engaged in lining up either in favor of or in opposition to the association of editorial room workers, already numbering about 10,000 in its membership.

William Randolph Hearst, owner of the San Francisco Examiner, the Call-Bulletin and other powerful papers in various sections of the United States, was interviewed on the eve of his departure from New York for Europe by a member of the New York chapter of the Guild. He was asked: "What is your attitude toward the Newspaper Guild?"

"I don't believe in the Newspaper Guild," Hearst replied. "I've always regarded newspaper work as a profession and not a trade union."

"But the guild isn't a trade union," "No, but it's likely to become one."

"Without the guild how are newspaper workers to protect themselves? Some publishers, unlike yourself, pay very small salaries."

"I believe in the objects of the guild—don't misunderstand me. I think it should help in getting better working conditions and proper compensation. But I like to feel that a newspaper is like a soldier, doing his work for the romance of it. I'm afraid organization will take the romance out of newspaper work. If the guild gets to be like a trade union it will dictate a lot of things that will be annoying to the publishers."

"Newspaper guilds have been satisfactory in other countries and they may be successful here. Will you make an inquiry in England, Germany and Italy into the working of newspaper guilds in these countries and see if that affects your attitude?"

Hearst smiled and nodded his head.

In accordance with a promise of President Roosevelt, the American Newspaper Guild has been granted representation on the Newspaper Industrial Board under the Daily Newspaper Code of the N. R. A.

OLD TIME REVIVAL HERE

A series of old time revival meetings will open at the Daly City Full Mission, 6229 Mission street, soon.

Preaching will be conducted by Jacob J. Sholota, known as the "Wandering Jew." He comes here from Los Angeles and is reputed to be one of the best Bible teachers and Christian evangelists in the West.

L. Morry is pastor of this church.

DALY CITY MAN
DROWNS WHEN BOAT CAPSIZES

Witnesses of Accident Make
Vain Efforts to Rescue
Imperiled Men

What was anticipated to be a pleasant fishing trip, Sunday, ended in a tragedy by the overturning of a small boat in Carquinez Straits and three men were thrown into the swirling stream.

Paul Henry Burke, 40, of Vendome avenue, Daly City, and his companion, Ludwig Bender, 32, of 234 Shottwell street, San Francisco, were drowned when their boat was swamped in the waters of the bay near Martinez.

Local police were requested by Corporal Kenny of the San Francisco police department to break the sad news to Mrs. Burke at their home here.

When members of the local police department called at the home they learned that Mrs. Burke, accompanied by the couple's two minor children, was in Eugene Oregon, at the home of her mother on a vacation at the time of the accident. Mrs. Burke and her mother, Mrs. Forcum of the northern city, upon being informed of the tragedy, immediately departed for Daly City.

Burke was employed in a stove manufacturing plant at 2205 Mission street in San Francisco.

The three men had rented a boat and set out from a picnic grounds in Contra Costa County to row to the fishing place. A short time later a sudden squall came up, swamping the small craft and killing the motor as the high waves passed over the boat.

J. W. Isom, 2217 Mission street, San Francisco, the third member of the party, swam to safety on shore only after a hard struggle with the waves. Before he reached land his companions had disappeared from view in the waters of the bay.

N. A. Fanquitti, 1430 Fifty-first avenue, Oakland, who was fishing nearby in an outboard motor boat, was attracted by the struggles of the trio and started for them to render aid. The two unfortunate men sank from view before he could reach them, as a high wave put his motor out of commission almost at once after his start.

Efforts were at once made to recover the bodies of the two drowned men. These were resumed on Monday and later in the week, but up to the present time have been without avail, as the bodies have not yet been recovered.

AMERICAN LEGION
AUXILIARY NOTES

(By G. J. H.)

Daly City Unit No. 410 will be joint hostess with Bayshore Unit No. 473 to the San Mateo County Council of the American Legion Auxiliary, Thursday evening, June 28, at the American Legion Hall, 474 San Diego avenue. The Council's Drill Team will practice on the playground preceding the meeting.

On Friday evening several members attended the large class initiation held by Greater Mission Unit No. 347. It was also their Fidac program. The meeting was dedicated to Mrs. Minnie McClellan, newly elected state president of the ladies of the G. A. R. There were many guests of honor including Governor Frank Merriam and party who came to pay tribute to Mrs. McClellan; national Vice president Elizabeth Drendell; Alice Gill; Gladys Anderson; Mabel Roseheim; Mary Ann Holt; Ethel Flynn and several others.

The drill team put on an exhibition drill which was well done. The Glee Club sang several numbers.

On Monday evening several members attended the initiation and installation ceremonies of the new Oceanview Unit No. 4984.

Greater Mission Units Degree Team put on the floor work and District President Mabel Roseheim presided. The officers of the new unit are: President Mary Martins; 1st Vice president Mary Martins; 2nd Vice president Elizabeth Thomson; Treasurer Bertie Haas; Sergeant-at-arms Lenore Dimas; Chaplain Christine Flood; Mrs. Martha Sanders, Past president of Golden Gate Unit No. 40, was instrumental in forming this new unit and we hope for it every success.

The annual pilgrimage to Santa Cruz of the second area will be made on Sunday June 24. Many will go over the day before and enjoy the entertainment and dance Saturday evening. On Sunday morning there will be a breakfast and meeting. In the afternoon there will be a parade and other features interesting to all Legionnaires and auxiliary members.

BANKER OFFERS PLAN TO RESTORE CREDIT

By J. W. MARCHBANK
(Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work)

Pertinent suggestions for getting out of the money muddle in which we find ourselves are made in several books by well known economists. One of the most timely methods of straightening things out is offered by Frank A. Vanderlip in his highly readable "Tomorrow's Money." The author had long experience as a banker but escaped the narrowing effect the business has on many men.

Agreeing with other students of the financial situation that an international understanding should be made establishing a gold bullion standard, Mr. Vanderlip passes on to a discussion of an innovation he calls a "Federal Monetary Authority." The Authority would have power to manage the currency of the country.

Conservatives among financiers are not sure they see a way out of the woods by the adoption of the Vanderlip plan as the Government body would have an important part in co-ordinating and manipulating credit as well as being a controlling force over the whole new commercial banking system.

The author does not anticipate much risk in the turning over of the monetary system to a Government agency but critics of the scheme profess to see possibilities of great mischief in so-called political management.

More interest than usual attaches to the story of the success of the Bralorne mine in the Bridge River district on account of Austin J. Taylor being the president of the company. Major Taylor is well known as a breeder and campaigner of thoroughbreds. His colors were carried to victory in the spring meeting at my Tanforan track.

In a review of recent activities at the mine, one of the richest in Canada, Sidney Norman, in the Vancouver Sun, says:

"In less than two years the mine has been brought to the dividend stage on the current basis of 60 cents annually; is increasing its milling capacity from 265 tons to 500 tons daily; employs 300 men and is the center of a prosperous community containing a population of twice that number."

"And yet it is only on the doorstep of its productive career, with greatest depth yet reached no more than 1,000 feet vertically from surface, and only 400 feet lower than the main tunnel driven in the days before the financial crash of 1929, when a great fortune was narrowly missed."

"At the annual meeting of the company, held less than two months ago, reserves were placed at 280,000 tons of 6 oz. ore, worth $5,880,000, and the statement made that operations then under way might be expected to double that amount within the next six or eight months; in other words, bring reserves to 560,000 tons, worth $11,760,000."

"A trip to that part of the wonderful mountains of British Columbia is an inspiration. It gives one faith in the future and proves the value of mining effort upon the upbuilding of a country and aggrandizement of civic wealth."

The Pioneer Mine, also in the Bridge River district, and even richer than Bralorne, had production for the first five months of this year of $1,240,340, with a net profit of $897,900. Earnings of between $3,300,000 and $3,500,000 for the entire year are indicated by the showing for the first five months.

TEAMWORK WINS
CLOSE GAME FOR ROYCE SPORTS

By "Moe" Plansky

Jack Gertzenberg's pitching was much too good for the strong American Building Maintenance team, and as a result the Royce Sports won by the score of 6 to 4 in the contest at the Funston diamond, played at 2:30 last Sunday afternoon.

Gertzenberg held his opponents to six scattered hits and pitched exceptionally well in the pinches when hits meant runs.

The Royce defense was exceptionally steady. "Babe" Pierotti, center-fielder, made a sensational running catch of a long fly ball in the ninth inning which saved the game. He also collected two hits.

Fernando at third base and Johnson at shortstop both played superb ball in the infield for the Royce team.

John Vasquis, shortstop for the Building team, played a sparkling game in the field and clouted a fast ball for the circuit with a man on the paths ahead of him. Risso, first baseman, did a wonderful job of relief hurling.

Sam Hawley, Royce manager, has signed another young high school player for his ball team whose name is Pfeifer, a catcher. This youngster possesses hustle and class, and, with a little more experience, he may go some place in the national pastime.

WINOOKA MAY REMAIN HERE
AS STALLION

Winooka, noted race horse from Australia, is on the way from Chicago to Sydney and will be munching red oat hay in a stall at Tanforan next Tuesday. But—the wish has been expressed by J. W. Marchbank to acquire Winooka for use in the breeding paddock at Heather Farm, and negotiations have been opened for the purchase.

It was the original intention of the owners of the galloper to sell him, following the windup of his racing career in this country. A transfer to the master of Heather Farm would simply be carrying out of their plans.

As a student of blood lines, Marchbank has a notion that Winooka, coming, as he does, from the most fashionable strains of both England and Australia, would be the best kind of "nick" for his matrons over in Contra Costa County. Windbag, sire of Winooka, had a record as a winner of route races, although Winooka himself has been known as a sprinter. With the proper blending of blood, Winooka might have progeny that could stay. The first requisite of a successful progenitor is speed, and Winooka possesses that in abundance. Windbag is a leading sire "down under."

Winooka is a double firstling, as he is of the first crop of Windbag and the first born of Kanooka. The dam of the phenomenally fleet "invader" is a daughter of The Welkin, considered the best sire ever imported to Australia from England. Vedette, Melbourne, Potos, Pocahontas and other famous thoroughbreds were firstlings.

In the old days such breeders as the late J. B. Haggin brought over stallions from Australia to California and had the satisfaction of turning out great runners.

NEVADA MINING MAN AND LEGISLATOR DEAD

Former Congressman Samuel S. Arentz of Nevada died in a hospital in Reno, Nevada, Monday, of a kidney ailment. He was 55 years old and since his defeat for re-election in 1932 after ten years in the House of Representatives has engaged in mining activities in Utah and Nevada. Besides the widow, six children survive.

NOTICE!

In next week's issue of the Record, J. W. Marchbank will tell of the best places in Daly City for citizens to patronize and why.

MINING NOTES

Gossip Pertinent to the Industry
Gathered from Various Sources

A. C. Garde, prominent mining engineer is owner under option, of the Rio Grande property near Smithers, British Columbia.

A syndicate has been formed taking over Garde's option on the property and it is anticipated that sufficient funds for the present program will be available within a week.

Garde retains a substantial interest in the property, and the fact that he will be constantly on the ground will ensure competent technical supervision of the work to be undertaken.

Garde's name first became prominent in 1906, at which time he was a member of the Royal Commission at Ottawa with reference to the silver lead-zinc situation in B. C.

Favorable reports of the Burns Basin mine located on the borders of the Spillmachine River in the East Kootenay mining area has been given by eminent mining engineers.

News from Canada, indicates the busiest season, over a far-flung area, in many years, enjoying more activity, in both lode and placer mining, than at any time since the original discovery of placer gold on Pine Creek back in 1898.

The largest hydraulic proposition in that of Northern Goldfields, will shortly be under way on Pine Creek. Important preliminary work was completed last season and it is expected that actual production will start this season upon an important scale.

The Grand Forks Gazette says that what appears to be an important discovery of gold ore has been made on the mountain a few hundred yards directly east of the old offices of Granby Mining, Smelting and Power Co., and less than a mile from the main business corner of the city.

The ore is described as "hungry looking," but there is said to be a veritable mountain of it. Four assays made by Hecla Mining Co. at the Union mine assay office, gave results varying from one to four ounces of gold to the ton.

News of the discovery, by Will Puritch and John McLeod, was followed by a veritable riot of staking, and the surrounding country was quickly plastered with locations.

Thomas J. Boond, formerly with the Yukon Government, will leave soon with a crew to take charge of the property of the Klondike Gold Quartz Mines Ltd. in the heart of the rich Klondike area where many millions of dollars in gold have already been recovered, directors of the company announce.

He will immediately establish a 30-ton mill and states that in his opinion $30,000 in gold should be recovered during the first year's operations.

Complete camp buildings have already been erected on the property and power and electrical equipment is on the ground. Two shafts have been sunk, and two tunnels driven, one of which is 285 feet long all in ore. These shafts and tunnels prove a mineralized zone.

Nove Brown of New York has old-fashioned ideas about wifely duty. Charging that Mrs. Brown neglected her home and children because of her craze for golf, he beat her with a golf club. At his trial he pleaded in extenuation that she was flirting with another man at the time.

Geological Survey in Ketchikan District

In the course of its investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska the Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, has recently sent a party in charge of A. H. Koschmann, associate geologist, to the Ketchikan district of southeastern Alaska. The main aim of this work will be to study the known occurrences of mineral deposits in the district, so as to obtain an understanding of their distribution, extent and geologic characteristics. In this way it is expected to obtain an insight as to the reasons for their occurrence and mode of formation that will be of significance, not only in pointing out the probable future value of the known deposits, but also in indicating those areas in which mineral deposits have not yet been discovered, but in which they may be searched for with most likelihood of success.

The work will be started in the vicinity of Ketchikan and will cover as much of the district as time and field conditions permit. With the approval of the Office of Indian Affairs, Annette Island, which has long been reserved for the use of the Metlakatla natives, will be included in the examinations. The work will be carried on throughout the season of favorable weather by the party operating from a launch with small boats, and tests will be made to obtain as reliable quantitative and qualitative information as practicable. Mining has been active in many parts of the Ketchikan district in the past, and such information as is available to the Geological Survey indicates that there is strong likelihood that equally successful operations may be resumed there in the future.

SURPRISE BRIDAL SHOWER IN COLMA FOR MISS WITT

Miss Hilda Witt was the honored guest at a surprise bridal shower last Thursday evening, given by Mrs. John Garibaldi, Mrs. J. H. Dennis and Mrs. P. L. Peterson.

Miss Witt's many friends gathered at the home of Mrs. P. L. Peterson. The table was prettily decorated in pink and white, with a large pink tree covered with pink and silver bells in the center. A beautiful set of cast aluminum was given to the bride-elect.

Those who participated were: Mrs. Jack Dennis, Mrs. Dorothy Garibaldi, Mrs. P. L. Peterson, Mrs. John Steffens, Mrs. Ethel Lombardi, Mrs. Arthur Steffens, Mrs. Evelyn Witt, Mrs. Albina Volkman, Miss Anita La France, Miss Muriel Grissler, Miss Emma Grissler, Mrs. Romilda Grondono, Mrs. Anita Heitman, Mrs. Charles Witt, Miss Myrtle Durbin, Miss Dolly Seimund, Miss Louise Seimund, Mrs. Edith Benedetti, Mrs. Dora Rossi, Mrs. Dino Agresti, Mrs. Adolph Cecchi, Mrs. Rose Franzetti, Mrs. H. SURPRISE BIRTHDAY PARTY

A surprise party was given at the home of Miss Peggy Vincent, 115 Crocker avenue, Wednesday evening of this week in honor of her chum, Miss Evelyn Rancatore, by a number of her friends.

The guests entertained themselves by dancing before the tempting dishes were served. The table was beautifully decorated in pink and blue.

Those present were Evelyn Rancatore, Esther Franklin, Shirley Hansen, Marion Williams, Peggy Vincent, Kenneth Hayden, Gylmer Hansen, Bill Doheman, Chuck Daniels and Albert Hansen.

COLUMN OF N. R. A. FACTS

Information regarding the N.R.A. will be furnished by W. H. Clay every week.

WHAT IS THE N. R. A.?

A Summary

The NRA is a great cooperative enterprise of American industry and the government for the purpose of achieving greater security and stability. It was established in order to deal with a desperate industrial situation—unemployment, inadequate wages, undue price cutting and unfair competition.

The NRA encourages the making of codes of fair competition by voluntary groups within industry. It sets up self government, with systematic governmental guidance, and subject to governmental supervision, in order to protect the public interest.

The NRA codes vary—no two are alike, but all contain certain provisions. Flexible methods, recognizing differing conditions, are followed. The NRA works for changes by consent—by conference, consultation and hearings. It preserves and uses democratic methods.

The NRA codes are eliminating many abuses in competition, and making trade practices between individuals and between organizations much more fair than they have been in the past. The codes are a great defense against racketeering, and help to protect honest business from the unscrupulous.

The NRA grants freedom to workers to choose the method of collective bargaining which they prefer. It has made great progress in abolishing child labor and sweated labor.

The NRA encourages consumers to state their needs and to protect their interests. It is a bold attempt to increase consumption of goods and services by the community.

The NRA is raising standards of living and spreading purchasing power among many groups in the community. It has already achieved wide reemployment and recovery.

The NRA asks all of industry, all workers and all consumers, to participate wholeheartedly in the program. Only by full participation can the values of the endeavor be discovered and tested.

The NRA commends its program for discussion by the American people, because it is a unique and American way of attaining both recovery and reconstruction and it is itself a great public forum which aims to achieve the greatest good for the greatest number.

SUPPORT THE BLUE EAGLE

"One year ago we were suffering and shrinking under economic pressures so intolerable that collapse was at hand," says the President of the United States. "We had arrived at the day to make our choice. We made that choice. The American people responded to the call for action with eager enlistment—enlistment in the struggle against ruthless self-seeking, reckless greed, and economic anarchy. We undertook, by lawful, constitutional processes to reorganize a disintegrating system of production and exchange.

"The method and details of that reorganization may and will change from year to year; but it is very certain that the American people understand that the purpose of the reorganization must be permanent for all the rest of our lives in that never again will we permit the social conditions which allowed the vast sections of our population to exist in an un-American way, which allowed a maldistribution of wealth and power."

The Blue Eagle is the symbol of this mighty effort of a united people to achieve security for all its citizens. Many have already been benefited by the Blue Eagle; industry, which has been given the right to organize against unfair trade practices and unfair competition; labor, which has been given the right to organize for its protection; the millions of the re-employed and their dependents; the millions whose wages have been raised and their dependents; the millions now have retained their jobs because of the upswing in business brought about by the Blue Eagle.

But millions are still out of work. So long as this condition obtains, no one of us can be secure, so closely are we linked together in our mechanized civilization. Only by helping those who have helped us so far on the road to recovery can we build for a future when there will be no "maldistribution of wealth and of power."

Support the Blue Eagle, steadily, resistlessly, for what it has already done and for what it has left to do.

Support the Blue Eagle because it proposes that the abundant life shall no longer be restricted to 20 per cent of the people of the nation.

Support the Blue Eagle because it maintains that true prosperity starts at the bottom—that 125,000,000 people have the right to a decent share of what they produce in this rich country. Support the Blue Eagle because it is the means that gives every citizen the right to help himself to a life of greater justice and greater opportunity.

Support the Blue Eagle because it is the application of the golden rule to our industrial as well as our spiritual life—a golden rule which appeals to the fundamental self-interest of every one of us. For while we are doing as we would be done by, we are helping to create a society in which there is a greater chance of happiness for ourselves and those dearest to us.

USE THE BLUE EAGLE

Word has been received by the NRA committee that advertisers are featuring their Blue Eagles in their own advertisements in large numbers in many of the cities of the nation. They are testifying through their own advertisements that when President Roosevelt signed the National Industrial Recovery Act potent forces for recovery were put in motion. They are giving expression to the fact that the mighty force of public cooperation has been responsible for much of the progress which has been attained.

Every member of a trade or industry who complies with an approved NRA code of fair competition is en-

SCHOOL CLOSSES FRIDAY

The Daily Vacation Bible School, which is in progress at the Grace Church of the Nazarene, closes Friday night. Mrs. Myrtle Young and her co-laborers plan to have the program well in hand by Friday morning, and assure all who attend not only an interesting program by the children but a fine exhibit of hand work.

The Bible School begins daily at 9:30 and the program promptly at 7:30 Friday night. The general public is invited.

WELL BABY CLINIC

Twenty babies were examined and the mothers advised as to their care, Wednesday, at the Well Baby Clinic on Mission street. This is an average attendance.

The women in charge were pleasantly surprised by a visit from the school nurse, Mrs. E. Lohr, who was kind enough to take time off from her vacation.

The clinic will not be open the first Wednesday in July owing to the holiday.

It is the same familiar badge of honor which has been a symbol of united effort everywhere. The word "code" appears on it. In many cases the Code Authorities are also giving the serial number of the particular local trade or industry.

Every local trade or industry complying with an approved code may secure the Blue Eagle by applying to the nearest office of the industry's authorized by NRA to distribute the Blue Eagles at once.

The NRA committee of Daly City is calling upon employers entitled to Blue Eagles to lose no time in requesting their insignia. No formality is necessary. Employers are asked to contact their Code Authority representative in person, by letter, by telephone, or by telegram. Attention is called by the committee to the fact that once the emblem is secured, reprints and reproductions of it may also be obtained with the authorization of the Code Authority. By using a number of insignia, effective displays have been possible. Reproductions in the form of stationery, stickers, labels, half-tones, electrotypes, etc., may be purchased in the market from any manufacturer authorized to reproduce the symbol.

If any local employer is in doubt about any point of procedure he may get in touch with the chairman of the NRA committee, Mr. W. H. Clay, 65 Guadalupe street, Daly City.

SOMETHING ABOUT REAL SPORTSMEN

In the Thoroughbred Record we find the following from the versatile pen of "Salvator":

"In a recent letter the writer pointed out that he had given his life to horses and therefore it has been a happy one. Few words I have read of late seem to me so well worth repeating, because of all they imply. There are hosts of men who have given up their lives to racing and it doesn't seem to me that they have lived or are living happy ones—one reason for which is that to them racing is only a medium for dollar-getting, simply that and nothing more—and for horses they care not at all. To the flavor and savor, the joy and happiness that can enter into a life that is given up to horses they are strangers and always will be. They have more money than the men who give up their lives to horses—but no money can pay for what they missed."

DRIVES INTO STORE FRONT

R. C. Strehlow of Neptune Beach, Alameda, who was driving a car here last Friday, became confused when he had stopped at a service station for water and in starting his machine he stepped on the starter while his car was in gear and backed across the street into a Ford truck parked in front of the Robertson store at 6454 Mission street. This caused the truck to back into the store occupied by Lindy's shoe repair shop at 6446 Mission street, breaking a large plate glass window and damaging the front of the building.

No one was injured.

INFANT SON PASSES

Baby Donald Richardson, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Richardson of Winchester street, was buried in Cypress Lawn last Tuesday.

The little child was born in the Community Hospital Tuesday, June 12 and passed away there on Monday of this week.

The mother is still a patient in the hospital.

The heartfelt sympathy of the community is extended the bereaved parents.

SYSTEM NEEDS PROTEIN DAILY

Required to Rebuild Worn
Out Body Tissues.

By EDITH M. LARBER

PROTEIN, as well as carbohydrates (starches and sugar) and fats, is a fuel food. Every gram of pure protein provides four calories—an equal amount to what a gram of carbohydrates provides and about half as much as a gram of fat gives us.

I am making this statement emphatic because some persons believe that protein does not provide calories. The reason for the first supposition is that protein is always included in liberal amounts in a reducing diet. This is for the sake of its other attributes as well as for the sake of its calories. We need protein every day in some degree to rebuild the tissues which are each day worn by the burden of everyday life. Children need an extra amount to build new tissue while growing. Any protein that is not used for building may be burned as fuel, which is used for heating the body to a normal temperature and for the energy which we use up in the body process and in exercise.

Experience has showed us, however, that protein should be used moderately in a well-balanced diet. About 10 per cent of the calories in a day's diet—which averages about 240 calories—is the usual standard for the protein requirement. Some authorities allow an increase over that amount and others feel that it is larger than necessary. When calories are cut down to 1,200-1,300 as they sometimes are in a reducing diet, the proportion of protein increases although the amount eaten remains about the same as in an average normal diet.

We get our supply of protein largely from animal foods, milk, eggs, fish, meat and cheese. Nuts and the legumes—peas, beans—are more complete in themselves and are more completely utilized than those from vegetable sources. Proteins are much more complicated in construction than are fats and carbohydrates. Protein is made up of large numbers of substances which are known chemically as amino acids. The efficiency of a protein depends upon the number of these acids and the proportion of each. Certain protein foods supplement each other, as for instance, the protein in milk and that in cereal, which we so often eat together. If milk is allowed in an otherwise vegetarian diet, the result will be satisfactory. There is, however, no good reason for persons in normal health to avoid any of the animal proteins. The body in good health is equipped to take care of certain waste products which are found in the digestion of meat and fish. When our organs lose some of this efficiency in later life, it is sometimes necessary to cut down on the amount of protein which we have been accustomed to taking.

Not long ago we all read of an experiment lasting a year when two men lived entirely on meat with no bad results as far as health was concerned. A large proportion of their diet, however, was fat from meat so that the percentage of protein was not as abnormally large as it seemed. As this experiment was undertaken in the interest of the health of polar explorers who must live on a meat diet for long periods, it was worth while to prove that man can live on a diet of this sort without untoward results. It does not, however, contradict the finding of long-time experiments—which advance that the best diet for many is a varied selection of available foods with plenty of fruits and vegetables as well as the protein and the fuel foods.

2 cups lima beans
1 cup dry bread crumbs
4 tablespoons peanut butter
½ teaspoon pepper
1 tablespoon poultry seasoning
2 tablespoons dried onion
1 tablespoon bacon fat
1 cup milk (more, if needed).
Wash and soak the beans overnight, then cook in boiling water until soft (about forty-five minutes). Drain, cool, then chop coarsely. Add crumbs mixed with peanut butter and seasoning, then fat, and milk to moisten. Put into a greased bread pan and bake in a mod-

Scalloped Ham and Potatoes.
6 potatoes
1 pound raw smoked ham
3 cups milk (or more).
1 green pepper (may be omitted).
Flour

Cover the bottom of an oiled baking dish with sliced, raw potatoes. Sprinkle with flour, add inch-square pieces of ham. Repeat until the dish is full. Pour in as much milk as the dish will hold. Bake (350 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit, until the potatoes are tender, one to one and one-half hours. Chopped green pepper adds to the flavor.

Eggs With Dried Beef.

2 tablespoons fat
¼ pound dried beef
2 tablespoons grated cheese
1 cup tomatoes
Salt
Pepper
4 eggs
Onion juice

Melt the fat in a frying pan and when hot add the dried beef. Cook until the beef is slightly fried, add the tomatoes, the seasonings mixed with the eggs, and the cheese. Stir and cook gently until creamy.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

To "Back" Somebody

HERE is a colorful word indeed—and used in many phases of life's activities.

For almost everybody at some time or another backs something or somebody.

It may be a horse that one backs; it may be a baseball team, an opinion, a business venture or what not, but whatever it is that one backs he is willing usually to justify it with his faith and co-operation and cash.

And the origin of the term? It is as simple as can be. For the word is taken directly, from the commercial practice of endorsing (or backing, that is, writing one's name on the back) a note, check, or bill, on behalf of another!

That Body of Yours

By

JAMES W. BARTON, M. D.

First Symptom of Heart Failure

AS STUDENTS it was our custom to listen to as many cases of heart disease as possible, and try to tell whether the murmur came with the first beat, with the second beat, just before the first beat, and the quality of the murmur.

Then with this worked out in our minds we tried to tell just which valves were affected and gave the disease its particular name. What do we find our instructors in medicine teaching the students now about heart disease?

While they have not done away with the names of the diseases affecting the heart, they attach very little importance to them, because they have or try to have all heart ailments down to a practical working basis.

What are the practical points?

First, has the heart enough power to do the work of the body when the body is at rest? Second, what amount of reserve has the heart when work, extra work, is demanded of it?

If the heart cannot do the ordinary work demanded, and cannot do a little extra work at times, then that heart is "failing" in its ability to work, and we have what is called "heart failure."

What are the signs that the heart is not doing its work properly, or is not strong enough to fulfill the usual demands on it?

If the failure is severe or has existed for some time the heart will be dilated, and there may be dropsy.

But before the heart becomes such a complete failure, what is the first sign that is noted by the patient himself?

Breathlessness on effort.

Remember everybody gets out of breath if they work or exercise hard or long enough. But if work that they have ordinarily been able to do without getting out of breath, now makes them breathless, the first thought should be to have the family doctor examine the heart thoroughly; that is lying down, sitting up, standing up, exercising, immediately after exercising, two minutes after exercising, by breath holding tests, and other methods.

However, an obstructed nose, a heavy meal, or being already tired, may cause breathlessness after effort, even when the heart is normal.

Remember, then, that the first symptom of heart failure is breathlessness on slight effort.

Insanity

ACRIME has been committed and the law seeks to punish the criminal. Immediately the defense makes the claim that the prisoner is insane and therefore cannot be punished by the law but should be placed in an institution for mental patients.

Fairminded people have no desire to see an insane man or woman punished by hanging or imprisonment, nor, on the other hand do they want to see a prisoner who is not insane escape the just punishment of his crime because a clever lawyer is able to bolster up a defense by various circumstances, illustrations and comparisons.

What is insanity anyway?

When we think of how judges, lawyers, and juries wrestle with the problem of what is and what is not insanity, it is not easy to give a full or complete definition of just what must be found about an individual before he should be called insane.

However in a general way it may be said that everyone of us is born with certain instincts, principal or first instincts they are called, such as love, hate, fear, joy. These are a part of us, ourselves in fact.

If, then, you love, hate, fear anybody or anything, that is your own business; at least that is what one would naturally think. And if this love, hate or fear does no harm to anyone else, no one but yourself knows that you possess it.

If, however, this love, hate, or fear so affects you that you want to do things that are not considered right by the community and by the laws of the land, then a fight goes on within you, a "conflict" as it is called, because these primal instincts are forcing you, on the one hand, to do these "wrong" things, and your moral training and the laws of the land are, on the other hand, fighting back these instincts.

If we think about some cases we know who have become mentally unbalanced, we find that they didn't want to mix much with others, wanted to do things differently, weren't much interested in other people, even friends or family; in fact, didn't want to be bothered or "hemmed in" by rules and regulations.

What are our mental specialists trying to do about this type of mental unbalance or imbalance?

These physicians recognize that human beings will always be born with these primal instincts—love, hate, fear—so that to prevent insanity every boy, girl, man and woman must be taught that the good of the community should be always the first thought.

CALIFORNIA LEADER WINS WIDE SUPPORT

By J. W. MARCHBANK

There is nation wide interest in the campaign I have under way for the reduction of the commission on pari-mutuel pools at California race tracks. Everywhere the notion is meeting with favor. It is realized high class racing can only be attained with a low "take."

Thomas B. Cromwell, an authority of recognized standing, recently said in an editorial in his paper, "The Blood Horse":

"John W. Marchbank is leading a movement in California for a change in the state law. He suggests lowering the 'take' to 9 per cent. We think he should be asking the lawmakers to divide the present commission by two and exact only one per cent for the state."

We are making haste slowly, as the truthful old adage has it, Mr. Cromwell. First we are asking the Legislature, which meets next January, to cut the "take" down from 12 per cent to 9 per cent. A little later, probably at the session of the state law making body in 1937, a request would be in order to make a reduction from 9 per cent.

I am in perfect accord with the Kentucky editor to keep promoters out of the field, men who go into the game simply to make money. The "take" should be sufficient to keep the pastime going on a plane insuring good purses and guaranteeing sport not exceeded in class in any country in the world.

My plan of dividing the 9 per cent commission on the pools is meeting with the approval of fair-minded sportsmen up and down the state. It provides for 6 per cent going to the racing association, 1½ per cent to a state fund for big race purses, and 1½ to the state for other purposes.

It is acknowledged on all sides that the races run with money from the state fund would be the biggest advertisement California ever received.

Wiley Post, one eyed Oklahoma aviator, who flew around the world alone in 7 days, 18 hours, 49 minutes, has been awarded the gold medal of the International Aeronautic Federation for the greatest air exploit of 1933. The honor is richly deserved; in fact, his feat was undoubtedly the most remarkable ever performed by a lone flyer in the history of aviation, and his record is likely to stand for a good many years to come.

THE NAVY'S NEW CHIEF

This month the United States navy has a new commander-in-chief in the person of Admiral Joseph M. Reeves, who succeeds Admiral David F. Sellers in the nation's highest sea command. Admiral Sellers will become commandant of the Naval Academy at Annapolis.

Admiral Reeves is known as an able and aggressive officer, who first attracted attention in 1894, when as an end on the midshipmen's football team, despite the fact he was suffering from an injury, he led his team to a 6 to 4 victory over the Army. As head football coach for the Navy in 1907, he again defeated the Army, this time by a score of 6 to 0.

When the battleship Oregon made her famous voyage around Cape Horn to join the Atlantic fleet in 1898, Reeves was in charge of her engines, and for his good work was advanced four numbers in rank.

During the World War he was cited for "eminent and conspicuous conduct" in battle. He became interested in aviation, and after the war took up flying and won his wings at the age of 53. He later became aircraft commander of the battle fleet. For his distinguished service in the World War he was awarded the Navy Cross. He attained the rank of rear admiral in 1927. While serving as commander-in-chief, he will have the rank of a full admiral.

In view of his impressive record, the country may feel confident that under Admiral Reeves the navy will be maintained at a high state of efficiency.

CREELY'S RESCUE

One of the most difficult and thrilling rescues in the history of polar exploration is recorded by its fiftieth anniversary on June 22, it being on that date in 1884 that Commander W. S. Schley of the navy found the remnant of the Greely expedition at Cape Sabine, only seven of the original party of twenty-five remaining alive.

Among the survivors was Lieutenant A. W. Greely of the army, in command of the party, which had been sent to establish a station for scientific observations in the Far North. After reaching the most northerly point touched by man up to that time, 83 degrees, 24 minutes north latitude, two expeditions sent to bring the explorers back to civilization failed to reach them. The third, under Schley, found the seven men more dead than alive, the other 18 having perished from exposure and starvation.

Schley and Greely were both destined to subsequently attain high rank in military service. Schley commanded the American fleet at the battle of Santiago during the temporary absence of Admiral Sampson, and later became a rear admiral. Greely became chief signal officer of the army and reached the rank of major general. Admiral Schley died in 1911, having lived ten years after his retirement for age.

General Greely is still living at the age of 90, despite three wounds received during the Civil War and the terrible hardships he experienced in the Arctic. He perhaps little thought of reaching such a great age as he helplessly awaited death or rescue in the frozen North a half century ago.

A GREAT PREACHER

One hundred years ago on June 19 there was born at Kelvedon, England, a child who was destined to become one of the greatest and most popular preachers in the history of Christianity, Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

He became pastor of a Baptist church at the age of 18, and at 20 was called to New Park Street Chapel in London. So great were throngs attracted by his preaching that the chapel had to be enlarged twice in two years. In 1859, when Spurgeon was only 25, the erection of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle was begun. It was finished in 1861, and in this imposing edifice he preached until his death in 1892.

His sermons were widely printed, averaging about 30,000 copies a week, and many of them were translated into various languages. He was also the author of a score of volumes on religious subjects which had an extensive circulation. In the fifty-eight years of his life he probably reached more people with the Christian message than had been so reached by any other preacher before or during his day.

Tennant Farmer is a tenant farmer near Montgomery, Ala., and a happy one at that. After serving three years of a ten year sentence for murder, he was paroled in 1929, since which time he has lived the life of a good citizen and industrious farmer, according to the testimony of his friends and neighbors. In consideration of his excellent record while on parole, Governor Miller has granted him a full pardon.

Harold Perkins of Darlington, England, takes his invalid wife for hikes in a wheel chair, sometimes covering thirty miles a day, sleeping wherever night catches them.

General Johnson and Clarence Darrow took a ride together. Probably rehearsing for their next act.

Asked who wrote the Book of Numbers, a Bible class student suggested the telephone people.

NEW ROAD AIDS ACCESS TO SHASTA-CASCADE AREA

Opening to more convenient and general enjoyment an area of unusual interest in northeastern California, the new section of highway on the road from Redding to Alturas, a unit of the Yellowstone Cut-Off, is attracting increased motor travel into the Shasta-Cascade region, reports the California State Automobile Association.

The new section of state highway, between Burney and Fall River Mills, is more than four miles shorter than the section of old county road which it replaces. In addition to the reduction in distance, the new road shortens driving time by obviating the many curves and difficult grades encountered on the old road. The new construction runs in a straightline for long stretches, with long easy curves where there are many. As a result the average driver can save fifteen to twenty minutes as compared with the old route.

As a unit of the Yellowstone Cut-Off, the new road marks another permanent improvement on the cut-off project, initiated six years ago by the Automobile Association as a means of more direct travel between California and Yellowstone National Park and the intervening touring and trading areas of eastern Oregon and southern Idaho.

The cost of the new highway, including bridges at Hat Creek, Pit River, and Fall River, was $696,000. Commenting on the work, a report by J. B. Hodges, district engineer for the division of highways, said:

"The lateral between Redding and Alturas is of utmost importance, providing access on the west to the Sacramento Valley and on the north to Oregon and Idaho. To sportsmen and vacationists of California it has become familiar as the route to scenic areas, good fishing grounds, and the mule deer country of Modoc County."

MOTOR TROUBLE SIGNS

Use of an excessive amount of gasoline or oil by your car, lack of power, or smoke coming from the exhaust pipe indicates that it needs mechanical attention, according to the emergency road service of the California State Automobile Association. Ordinarily, these are symptoms of worn pistons and rings, but there are other possible contributing causes arising from trouble in the valves, spark plugs and ignition system.

TWO PROGRAMS FOR FISH AND GAME COUNCIL

SACRAMENTO, June 21. — Two major programs are embraced in the actions of the State Council of the Fish and Game Development Association and were unanimously passed by that body in meetings just concluded in both northern and southern California, according to Carl F. Johnson, president.

The programs embrace: Repeal of the present so-called fish screen law, the return of "frozen" funds of the fish and game preservation fund and elimination of a recurrence of such "freezing."

The fish screen program embodies the following: "To secure, at the earliest practicable moment, the repeal of the unfair and selfishly conceived sections of the law relating to the installation of fish screens that were enacted by the state legislature in the 1933 session, which, in the main, provide that the sportsmen of California shall pay one-half of the cost of installation of fish screens in the water diversions of the state; and, to have enacted in their place amendments to the fish screen law that will reinstate the old law as it stood prior to the changes made by the legislature in the 1933 session."

The "frozen" funds program sets forth: "To take such proper action as is necessary to insure the return to the fish and game preservation fund of the approximately $305,000 'frozen' by the legislature during the 1933 session, and to take such proper action as is necessary to eliminate any possibilities of a recurrence of such legislation by the legislature during its 1935 or subsequent sessions."

Simultaneously with the announcement of these programs by the association, President Johnson has made known the affiliation of the Shasta Rod and Gun Club, located in Shasta County, with headquarters at Redding. "The enrollment of the Shasta Rod and Gun Club by the association gives sportsmen another strong link in the statewide chain, extending from the Oregon line to Mexico," said Johnson. "The sportsmen of California are now ready to inaugurate and carry through a constructive program of wild life conservation and restoration. We are gathering new support daily. The outlook is very encouraging."

One thing may be said for the nudist. The good Lord made 'em that way.

A SUMMER discount

Buy and Install Gas Heating now SAVE 10%

Purchase Payments deferred UNTIL OCT-1st

PAY LATER

WHY is there a Summer Discount on gas heating equipment?

The gas heating equipment trade makes you this special offer to create work for its skilled crews of installation mechanics during the off-season summer months. It helps them maintain these skilled men in year-round employment. So there is passed on to the customer a 10% discount on the cost of both equipment and installation at this time.

You gain in many ways by having your gas heating equipment installed now. You save first of all a full 10% on the total cost of equipment and its installation. Your equipment is installed with more careful workmanship than is always possible during the winter heating season rush. You get immediate installation although monthly payments for both the equipment and installation do not begin until October 1.

...FOR EXAMPLE...

On a Central Warm Air Furnace You Save from $20 to $30
On a Steam Heating System . . . You Save from $30 to $50
On a Floor Furnace You Save from $9 to $15
On a Radiantfire You Save from $2 to $8
On a Circulating Heater You Save from $3.50 to $5
On a Gas Steam Radiator You Save from $3 to $7

This Special Summer Discount will be available for a limited time only. Take advantage of this money-saving opportunity today.

SILVER PLATES FOR DIPLOMAS

Colorado School of Mines Has New Style For "Sheepskins"

Graduates of the Colorado School of Mines receive something different in the way of diplomas this year. These are plates of silver, five by six inches in size, about a fourth the size of the usual diplomas. They weigh three and three-quarter ounces.

The signatures of the board of trustees and the heads of the various departments were recorded by photostat, while that of the president was inscribed with an etching pen. A special coat of lacquer will prevent the silver diplomas from tarnishing. The "sheepskins" were incased in plush lined leather cases.

This is but one evidence of a wave of change coming over ancient academic customs. At Ohio State University "sheepskins" have been replaced, after eighty years, with small diplomas, eight and a half by eleven inches in size, in leather cases. High school diplomas in many places have been reduced to neatly engraved pocket size certificates to be carried in leather cases in the pockets.

There are probably two reasons for the changes. One is economy. The other, and more important one, is convenience. If diplomas are to be practical to the young engineer or the high school graduate seeking a job, they should be small enough to handle easily. The metal diploma for mining engineers, many of whom go to far corners of the earth, is both convenient and sentimentally appropriate.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla. Phil Hoffmann, editor of the Oskaloosa (Iowa) Herald, says: "Advertising over the radio, on the billboard, or in a window is much like the hit and run driver. It flares for the moment then disappears in the mist and dust of the fleeing cars. If you are quick enough to get the number you may find the owner later, but in most cases the phantom is gone forever."

"An advertisement in a newspaper is different. It is prepared with an idea of truthfulness and permanency. When you see an advertisement in your paper, you don't have to jump at conclusions or chase a vanishing specter. All you have to do is lay the paper away and refer to the advertisement at your leisure, and as often as you please. The information is there in black and white, and you can even carry the message along with you in order that every detail may be carried out by the advertiser. "The advertisement on the air is heard only by the comparatively few who happen to be listening at the time. The advertisement in the window or on the fence is garbled by only a few passersby. While an advertisement in a good paper covers the field completely, going into every home in its territory and staying there to visit intimately with the whole family. There is no substitute for an advertisement in a newspaper."

After the recent Democratic primary in Alabama a candidate who ran a poor third was considering having a card of thanks to his few supporters published. His young son suggested a cheaper plan: "Just send 'em a postcard, daddy, it won't take many."

CONTRACTORS MUST APPLY FOR LICENSES

With an upward trend apparent in the building and construction industry, contractors and builders in the Daly City area who fail to apply for their 1934-35 state contractors' licenses before June 30, will be endangering their right to bid on new construction work.

James Fellom, regional inspector for the state contractors' license bureau in this district so advised local builders here today in urging prompt action in filing renewal applications. All existing licenses expire June 30.

The inspector, who will confer with San Mateo County contractors here late this month, hailed the large number of renewal applications already filed as "further indication of a general improvement in building and construction operations."

Under state law, Inspector Fellom asserted, all building and construction contractors must be registered. Renewal applications filed before June 30 require a $10.00 fee. "The contractors will each save $5.00 by filing their renewal application immediately," he said.

"The heavy volume of renewal applications received in the Sacramento offices," Inspector Fellom said, "is gratifying and indicates a continued improvement in building and construction operations in this vicinity."

"The trend of business appears to be improved generally, and we feel confident that the 1934-35 registrations will exceed the total for the fiscal year ending June 30."

The inspectors district includes; San Mateo, and neighboring counties.

State Highway Patrol Asks Parents Co-operate

With the release of several hundred thousand children from school in California for the annual vacation period, the California Highway Patrol has called on parents and motorists to co-operate in reducing the motor death toll.

Children released from school are apt to be forgetful of traffic dangers in their joy, it was pointed out. Unless both motorists and parents are careful, there are likely to be many tragic accidents during what should be the happiest period in the life of the children.

"Traffic officers and city police will do all they can, but they cannot be everywhere," said E. Raymond Cato, chief of the patrol. "Motorists can do their part by being careful; parents can do theirs by warning their children and pointing out traffic dangers to them."

Here are some suggestions offered by the patrol to parents:

Do not allow children to play ball in the streets.

Warn children against riding bicycles into streets on the wrong side of traffic. Warn them against darting from behind parked machines.

Require children to remove roller skates before crossing a busy street.

Instruct them to look both ways for traffic before crossing, to obey all traffic lights and never to take a chance.

Chief Cato said: "Reduce your speed to ten miles an hour when passing playgrounds and other places of recreation where children are congregated."

"Drive slowly when passing children at play in the street and sound your horn frequently."

"Take no chances when children are crossing the street in front of you on bicycles or roller skates."

"Proceed slowly through alleys."

"Do not creep up on children as they are apt to become confused if you do not notify them of your approach."

"Keep your brakes in such condition that you can come to a complete stop quickly."

SHOCK ABSORBERS

PRECAUTIONS FOR SAFETY BY SERA

Life and the enjoyment thereof is being protected to the limit of science and human precaution upon all work projects inaugurated in California by the State Emergency Relief Administration.

Medical supervision and attendance, provision of first aid kits, proper engineering procedure, and insistence that all persons upon work relief take care of themselves and their fellow workers are a few of the cardinal precautions announced by Administrator R. C. Branion as mandatory in all cases.

Procedure in case of venomous bites, accidents to eyes, precautions to be taken in demolition of buildings, steps to insure against faulty tools, and protection of the public as well as the worker are included in detailed instructions which have been sent to all SERA safety field supervisors, county directors, and supervising engineers, Branion announced today.

At the same time steps are being taken to insure maintenance of sanitary conditions in camps. Drinking water must be pure and obtainable from sanitary containers. Adequate first aid stations must be maintained. Motor vehicles and other machinery are being checked constantly as to their safety for operation. SERA county directors are empowered, where necessary, to set up a separate administration project to cover health, safety, and insurance.

The State Emergency Relief Administration will furnish, without cost to workers, safety glass goggles for protection of eyes upon all work where eye injury is a hazard of labor, and provision is made for sterilization of these goggles before they are transferred from one worker to the other. Use of these goggles will be required in all occupations where eye protection is necessary.

Special safety precautions are being taken upon all demolition and wrecking projects, a number of which are in progress in Southern California both for the safety of workers and the public. Men engaged in this work also are being given special instruction for the protection of their own health and that of their fellow workers.

HARRY HOUDINI

A recent article recounts the feats of the late Harry Houdini, who was perhaps the greatest magician of all time—a man whose mysterious performances led many to believe that he was endowed with supernatural power.

But Houdini himself made no such claims. He declared that he performed his astounding exhibition acts through sheer physical dexterity acquired by years of study and practice. His ability to escape from a wooden box, wrapped with ropes and chains, in which he was bound hand and foot and paced under water, was a remarkable example of his skill, while he repeatedly demonstrated that he could release himself from any kind of handcuffs or shackles that might be placed upon him.

One of Houdini's feats was to remain in a sealed coffin under water for an hour and a half, conserving the oxygen in the small air space by taking short and infrequent breaths.

Much attention was given by Houdini to the exposure of spiritualistic mediums, all of whom he denounced indiscriminately as frauds. He made a standing offer of $10,000 to any medium who could produce any phenomena which he could not duplicate through natural agencies. The reward was never claimed.

Houdini wrote several books on various phases of his art, but it is said that the secrets of his most important and almost incredible performances died with him.

During his lifetime he thrilled millions of spectators throughout the world, including many rulers and notables, but his most lasting contribution to the advancement of civilization was his fearless and uncompromising warfare upon charlatanism in all its forms, and its attendant frauds and superstitions.

NEW GAS ENGINE

A new gas engine model washing machine is built so that the power plant can be detached instantly and rolled on castors to any part of the home or farm yards. The motor is strong enough to run such machinery as feed grinders, ice cream freezers and the like.

Auto Registration Shows Increase

California's total motor vehicle registration as of April 30 last was 1,940,517, an increase of 34,692, or 1.82 per cent, over the same date in 1933, reports the California State Automobile Association. The increase was reflected in every class of fee paid registrations except solid tire vehicles. The total number of vehicles was made up of 1,738,909 automobiles, 95,831 pneumatic commercial, 3867 solid commercial, 6749 motorcycles, 52,586 pneumatic trailers, 4919 solid trailers and 75,312 fee exempt registrations.

Another paradox is that the silent partner usually has the last word.

SYNOPSIS

On her way to a position in Lostland Academy, Janet Mercer, young professor of English literature and rhetoric, meets on the train a young man, Arthur Fleming, also on his way to the Academy, as professor of mathematics and chemistry. They reach the railroad station, and meet Mrs. Denver, engaged as matron of the Academy.

The farmer continued gazing at them; then, as if this were none of his business, he chirped to his horses and the wagon moved ponderously forward. At the same moment they heard the distant chug of a motor, and a car swung into view from around a curve.

Behind it, clattering and swaying, appeared an open wagon, drawn by two bony white horses. The poor beasts evidently had been whipped down the mountain, and Janet, now seeing singularity in the most obvious circumstances, felt that even the horses in this wild region looked like the horses in a miracle pageant, lean and scarred and foam-flecked, with long, thin necks protruding toward scenes in which, animal-like, they scented disaster.

The man who drove the car was a septuagenarian in appearance; his companion, directing the white horses, a youngish fellow with a rather sullen air.

"The new teachers?" he asked with a kind of leer toward the imperturbable old man on the front seat.

"Yes—and as you have but one train a day here, it seems to me you ought to be able to meet it promptly," Fleming remarked, conscious that his structures were not altogether logical.

The man laughed and began putting the baggage in his wagon and adjusting a tarpaulin over it, with the comment that it was likely to rain. The old driver of the car indicated by a wave of the hand that they were to get in; Mrs. Denver and Janet, both secretly rather unhappy and nervous, took their places. But when the car began its journey into the hills the three newcomers lost for the time their anxiety in wonder over the view which every height or curve unfolded to their eyes.

"How far is it?"

"About five miles."

"Is it near a village?"

"It used to be—we're comin' to the ruins—a genuine deserted village. It was called Lostland, too, in the old days."

"Where do you get your supplies?"

"From the city—from Oteaga."

There was no time for further discussion; for now they were entering a road protected from curious visitors by high iron gates—newly painted, spanned by an iron grille bearing in letters once gilded the words "Lostland Academy."

They now beheld a great mansion looming beyond the immense pines, which were shaking in the wind. Built massively in the shape of a Greek temple, its high porch columns reached to the roof and supported a tympanum on which was bleaching a Latin motto in tall, black, faded letters which Fleming at Janet's request translated as the Biblical text, "Unless the Lord build the house, their labor is in vain that build it."

From the central body of the building, which was of brick, warm and time-tuned and superimposed upon a basement of granite blocks, two wings of the same material jutted out; the whole covered with huge metallic green patches of English ivy carefully cut away from the long, narrow Georgian windows filled with small panes of glass flashing purple and violet iridescence. Lilac bushes almost as tall as trees partially hid some of the ground-floor windows. A strange hush was over the place, so deep, so profoundly unbroken by human voices or sounds, that the three passengers spoke in whispers as if not to introduce a discordant note. An evergreen walk, outlined by enormous, century-old box bushes, stretched to a far perspective. In that walk a tall man was pacing with a cloak over his shoulder. He looked both unhappy and reliable.

The car stopped before a majestic front door with a fan and side-lights filled in with delicate iron tracery. Shoe scrapers in ancient iron flanked the stone steps. Down these a man about forty years of age came to greet them; tall, clean shaven, with bright, restless eyes and an over-solicitous manner, he seemed more like a very keen financier than a school-master. He was fastidiously dressed in a nearly new suit of leaf brown; his neat, dark-maroon tie held a scarf-pin which Janet noticed at once, a cameo carved in the shape of a tiny death's head. In his buttonhole he wore a gardenia, strangely reminiscent, Janet thought, both of funerals and festivities.

"Ah, my new teacher of English literature! my new teacher of mathematics! my new matron!" he said in a soft, almost paternal voice which filled Janet with a vague resentment. "Welcome! welcome! Down that avenue between the evergreen hedges you see the new professor of psychology—almost like Hamlet in appearance, isn't he? I told him he suited the old academy quite marvelously. Come in! come in!"

They followed him into a broad, imposing hall paved with lozenges of black and white marble, which at one place bore an insertion in green stone of a laurel wreath surrounding the letters in black marbles, "Lostland Academy."

On the white-paneled side walls hung dark oil paintings of stern and scholarly men in gown and bands, their yellowed hands resting on neat piles of books. Beyond them, one of a much later date, and apparently executed by a portrait painter of ability. It represented a man in middle life, clothed in the academic gown, with a crimson hood, and wearing the "mortar board." The gown was flying in the wind indicated by bending treetops and a wild sky of cumulus clouds, and the artist had put an expression in the eyes far removed from academic calm—a searching, hungry, sorrowful look. The background was the savage scenery of the neighborhood.

"The first three presidents of Lostland," Haskell said, with a wave of the hand toward the older portraits.

"Who is the fourth—the very sad gentleman who seems to be running from this spot?" Arthur asked boldly.

Haskell changed color, flashing a look almost of hatred at his new teacher. "The fourth is Dr. Jethro Bracebridge," he replied curtly.

"I see a lake in the background. Is there a lake near here?" Janet questioned.

"Yes, we have a small but terrifically deep lake almost back of the grounds; and from it recedes one of those wild gorges for which this middle section of New York state is justly famous."

"It has a waterfall, of course?" Janet remarked.

Haskell gave her a piercing look. "Are you clairvoyant? Yes, it has a fall—rather a high and terrible fall—a direct sheer drop of two hundred and twenty-five feet from an out-jutting ledge. Above this fall," he continued, his manner becoming more gracious, "the cliffs rise to a height of four hundred feet. Let me show you into the drawing room."

He ushered them into a long apartment filled with old-fashioned green velvet covered chairs and sofa. Over the fireplace hung a painting of the old academy, representing it in the blandness of some forgotten summer, a coach-and-four drawn up before the pillared portico, and little girls in full skirts and pantalettes rolling hoops on the trim walks or playing battle-dore and shuttlecock on the shaved green lawns. Some old samplers hung on the wall, the work of children gone long ago to their rest. A large photograph album bound in green leather lay on a marble-topped console table. Mechanically Janet raised its cover.

"Don't touch that, please," Haskell said sharply.

She took her hand away—flushing with embarrassment. "I beg your pardon. I really have no special interest in the book."

"No matter, Miss Mercer, I suppose I'm fussy. Perhaps the old things shouldn't be about—but I like to have everything as it was in my stepfather's time—my stepfather, Dr. Jethro Bracebridge. I was very devoted to him. I watched over his last melancholy years when the old place was shut up. We'll have tea here, and then you can go to your rooms. You'll dine upstairs tonight."

Janet was beginning to breathe more freely. She removed her hat, and her soft, burnished brown hair released made a kind of aureole about her face. Her eyes with excitement and fatigue were at once bright and dark, and more deeply blue than Arthur had ever known a woman's eyes. Even Mrs. Denver looked at her with a kind of maternal admiration; and Arthur felt anticipatory jealousy of "Hamlet." They saw him pass the three front windows walking slowly, his cloak blowing in the wind. Then he entered; a young man with old eyes, a very sensitive, slightly repressed mouth, and a rather puzzled, almost apprehensive expression.

"I am Wilton Payne, the new teacher of psychology," he said simply.

Arthur shook hands with him, and introduced him to Janet and Mrs. Denver. Upon Janet his eyes rested with friendly quiet admiration.

"And you, I believe, Miss Mercer, are to bring Crashaw, and Chaucer, Burns and Shelley to this ancient academy?"

"I hope so."

"In all my life I never knew a place so silent," Mrs. Denver announced in a hushed voice and with a look over her shoulder, as if she were afraid of some one creeping up behind her.

"Where are the scholars?"

Wilton Payne and Arthur exchanged glances, and as if reading each other's thought, looked nervously away. The former arose from his seat and stared out of one of the windows.

"I wonder if houses possess mental and emotional states approximating those of a long line of occupants. This place seems absolutely vibrant to me; as if people were hurrying through the corridors, and yet I haven't seen a soul since I arrived an hour ago."

A rather obtuse-looking country woman entered with a tea tray and put it down on the marble-topped table which occupied the center of the room.

Chic Plaid or Dotted Sports Linens

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A CRAZE for linen is on. Any fabric, just so its linen, seems to be the idea when it comes to material for this summer's sports, afternoon, and even formal evening costumes. Add accessories to the list, for the summer style program is largely made up of hats, shoes, gloves, pocketbooks and neckwear which are fashioned of linen ranging from finest and sheerest of handkerchief linen to sturdy linens which make the handsomest suitings imaginable.

It's the actual seeing of these marvelous linens which makes one appreciate and realize the why and the wherefore of the fuss and furor made over them. The new plaided and checked, dotted and otherwise patterned soft Irish linens "get you" the moment you glimpse them. That good-looking are they, the smart set are having their travel and about-town and clubhouse costumes tailored of these materials.

As for beach and tennis, golf and general sports wear, these linens—well, words fail us. However, here are three illustrations which will get the message across better than anything that might be said or written on the subject.

If you are in the class of enthusiasts which go in for tennis and golf, beach sports, hiking and general outdoor sports and leisure pastimes no need telling you that "shorts" are the order of the day. It is our personal opinion that no trio of shorts costumes could be more attractive if they tried than the group here pictured.

SHOW SHORT SKIRT WITH SUMMER GARB

There are rumors to the effect that as summer advances, street frocks and suits will be slightly shorter, so that one must get after calves and ankles that have thickened.

It is possible to buy anklets of rubber that will reduce fatty accumulations.

They can be worn at night. Certain exercises are helpful—high kicking, running up stairs, lifting up on the toes. Massage will take off inches if it is vigorous.

Make a bracelet of the hands, twist and turn and dig in. Rub up and down with the flattened thumb. During the treatment keep the skin surface covered with borated talcum.

Travel Accessories Best Matching All Clothes

If you are going on a trip and haven't room in your bags to pack several pairs of evening slippers and an extra wrap, take along something that will blend with each formal gown which you intend to wear.

If one of your frocks is black and another is blue, pale green or some other pastel shade, black slippers and a black wrap will go with each dress.

Brown satin pumps and a brown wrap will blend with almost everything except black. They're very nice with pink and good with silver and gold.

Seersucker Raincoats

Checked seersucker is being used to fashion many popular raincoats. Some of them are made in a sleeveless style with cape tops. Matching umbrellas and hats complete these ensembles.

Velvet for Summer

Black velvet and white pique are being featured in one important eastern summer collection of hats. The velvet appears in crowns, brim facings, flowers, belts and pipings.

Pleated shorts turn a clever trick, for they give every appearance of a smart-fashioned short skirt, which makes them eligible to many an occasion where the more simply constructed shorts might seem out of place. The pleated shorts on the seated figure in the illustration are very attractively styled. The stunning blouse with its chic high collar and its modish side fastening and its intriguing sleeves is fashioned of a soft Irish linen which is plaided in blue. The pleated shorts are bright red which makes a very patriotic coloring, indeed, for this good-looking sports costume.

The shorts to the left are also made of blue and white Irish plaid linen, only the plaids are larger than for the blouse just described. Navy blue buttons and a navy blue eton collar are good color accents. Inverted pleats both in front and back insure perfect freedom. The fashionable high neckline in front and a completely bare back follow along lines of newest daytime décolletage, a good idea for sun tanning.

The Irish linen which fashions the beach shorts to the right in the group is of the loose-weave uncrushable type which gives such entire satisfaction in the wearing on hot summer days for rough-and-tumble frolic in the sands. It is backless with a graceful V-line front neckline, which adopts small revers so that if one wants to slip on a jacket after one's sun bath, the costume is quite complete.

NEW MILLINERY

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here's two of the latest in distinctive millinery. For the very good-looking model at the top the designer makes a pirate's cap drape of vel piquante which is a multi-colored striped velvet which made its debut this season, and uses it for the crown of this handsome wide-brimmed navy blue straw. The colors are red, blue, navy, yellow and white. The effect is striking and novel. The new straws are often cellulose and the straw vote is "yes" to the stunning model below in the picture. The high-luster effect which is now so very fashionable in blacks is sustained by a trimming of wide cellulose ribbon. Worn also are rayon mesh gloves with cellulose ribbon cuffs which together with the chapeau makes a stunning ensemble, which was much admired during a recent exhibition of man-made materials held recently in New York by the Fashion Group of that city.

LOVE IS LIKE THAT

By M. A. SWAN
© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"N"AW. She ain't fat. That's her girl friend. They was both in here las' night. The Des Moines bus was leavin'.

What ja say her name is?" The voice rose shrill and thin to a nasal whine, but the porter's memory refused to be prodded.

Louise plunked down her nickel.

"Some of Alta's and Florence's audience," grinned Tim, with a nod toward the argumentative fellow. "Pretty raw."

"Dumb," agreed Louise.

She had hurried, for this was to be a gala evening.

Phil was coming at six-thirty, there would be dinner at the country club and dancing.

Dr. Phil Plummer—brilliant-eyed, casually charming, with plenty of savoir-faire.

She must have been born lucky. Dance rhythms teased her feet.

Phil could dance! Almost she wished the boys wouldn't cut in so much.

But that cutting in kept her stock high with Phil.

He might grumble about it, but he was proud of her popularity.

It was just one year since he had finished his internship at Iowa City and he already had a good practise.

Professional duties had more than once held up their dates an hour, or two, or three, and more than once there hadn't been any date at all.

It was a good thing he was not as careless of his patients; she didn't suppose he charmed them back to life and health, though it was her private opinion he could do just that.

There was gossip about town that young Doctor Plummer had learned a bit too much about stimulants, but the townspeople liked their young ones high-spirited.

At six-thirty Louise was immaculately and fragily attired in wood brown linen, a perfect complement to her tawny eyes and hair.

She didn't expect Phil on time—he never had been—doctors never were.

Calmly she began a story.

It was seven-thirty when she went to the porch and looked up and down the street.

Eight o'clock.

The magazine arched high and struck a chair across the room.

No Phil. No car. No phone call.

Her conscious calm was wearing thin and she was getting hungry.

Eight-thirty.

Now she was holding fast to her calmness.

The phone bell shrilled.

"Louise, dear, can you forgive me?" Phil's voice was warm, pulsingly alive.

"Out of town case, honey. Have to dress now. And, Louise, I'm starved. Let's eat at the Dragon. I'll make it over there by nine."

"Right," said Louise, warm and alive again. "It must have been twins, or d. t. s. Hurry!"

At 9:30 Phil appeared.

"Sweet," he breathed, arms about her, lips brushing her hair. His eyes—deep, unquiet pools of black—stirred her.

The hours she had waited were forgotten.

The Golden Dragon afforded excellent food, and an equally excellent place to raise h—l.

But it was too early for the latter and Louise and Phil spent a deliciously companionable hour over their dinner.

"Shall we dance here, or go to the club?" Phil asked.

Louise wanted to go to the club, but—

"You say, Phil. I don't care."

"Then we stay, and I won't have to share you."

That settled that.

As they danced her thoughts blurred into the theme of the music—"so gorgeous, so divine, and you were mine—"

"Warmish," suggested Phil as they walked to their table.

"Have a drink?"

They drank gin rickeys.

"mm. . . I feel cool as an icicle," she smiled.

"That won't do. That will not do," he emphasized with the domineering look she loved on his face. "We're leaving right now."

The car nosed slowly off the road and stopped just short of a fence.

Their kisses were breathless, portentous like the night.

It frightened Louise, she was glad when he released her and mentioned drinks.

She felt the need of conversation.

"Now that prohibition's over," she suggested, "do you suppose they'll drink as much at State? The medics certainly have had a reputation down there, haven't they?"

Phil put away the liquor.

"Now what d'ya s'pose she means by that?" he inquired blankly of the night.

"Young lady, what was that crack about d. t. s. I heard over the phone, tonight? Come, come, what's it all about?"

She smiled at him—a crystal smile.

"So you won't talk? All right . . ."

He turned away from her.

She sat quiet a minute.

"Oh, Phil, I know you're teasing but it scares me, anyway. What you do to me—" she sighed, a tiny catch of her breath.

"Louise, you're beautiful," his voice was vibrant, arms at once steady and gentle.

"Sweet, Sweet!" . . . Silken kisses caressed her eyes, hair, lips.

"I want you, honey. . . I love you so much. You are—sweet. . . let's not wait. . ."

husky, trembling, passionate his words tumbled out.

"No, no, Phil! You don't know what you're saying!"

Louise frightened, tried vainly to evade his caresses.

His arms tightened roughly.

"Darling, I need you, love you. Louise we belong to each other, why do we have to wait? Let's take our happiness while it's new and young."

She was struggling to get out of his arms. "We are all that matter, dear, it's our love, our happiness, and silly conventions don't mean a thing against those. Don't you love me?"

"Phil!" It was a gasp.

Desperately she pushed him away. Her eyes held stark unbelief and a bit of horror.

Silent, staring straight before him, he drove her home.

Stunned, she could say nothing, feel nothing until she was alone in her room.

The moon looked in her window, fiery, malignant.

Suddenly a deluge of shame, shame for Phil, engulfed her.

Disappointment in him sickened her.

Phil—whom she loved and was engaged to—romantic, teasing, charming Phil was no better than that squeaky voiced kid asking for Alta in the bus station.

At eight o'clock next morning her mother knocked at her door.

"Louise, Phil's on the porch waiting to see you."

"Oh!" Just that. Blankness inside her.

Quickly she brushed back her hair, dashed cold water on her face, and dressed.

Phil came to meet her, eyes somber, mouth straight.

He did not touch her.

His voice was steady, but lifeless.

"Louise, I'm nothing but a drunken fool. I can't give any excuse, can't ask you to forgive me. You're a thousand times too good for me—you're perfect—you're lovely. I just want you to know that I really love you, always will. And—good-by."

He turned.

"Phil," she spoke low, touched his sleeve. "Don't go, Phil. I—oh, I love you, Phil. Maybe it was my fault. . ."

Here was a new Phil, not depending on charm to carry him through, but straightforward, with humility.

Phil's eyes were searching hers.

"Louise, I don't deserve it—you are good, and you are lovely." He spoke gravely, his voice deepened with feeling.

He kissed her forehead lightly, and was gone.

She was not muddled now. He didn't say sweet—he said lovely. A smile curved her lips. "And last night I thought I'd never be happy again!"

Love is like that.

Gods of Old Palmyra Varied in Their Type

Gods adored in the beautiful and proud old city of Palmyra were mixed-breed divinities, as is evidenced by frieze reliefs unearthed at the ruins. The reliefs show gods that had become half-Greek, but were still partly Arabic, pre-Islamic, and other types, says Science Service.

Remains of this Syrian city, which stood at so strategic a post in the desert that it held the world's commerce in its finger, are being excavated by French archeologists.

Reporting discoveries before the Berlin Archeological society, H. Seyrig, director of the Service of Antiquities of Syria, told of excavations at Palmyra's mighty Temple of Bel. Since the temple has been cleared of the Arab village and mosque built inside it, new glimpses of the architecture and religious aspects of the temple are possible, he reported.

The excavations show that the building was originally planned and built as a normal Greek temple, with a double peristyle of Corinthian columns. But contrary to usual precedents, the builders did not set the entrance on the narrow side of the rectangle. They placed it on the long side, and not even in the middle. It is believed that the Greek plan was changed to accord with Assyrian and other ancient Oriental models. And this is considered significant, showing that Oriental influences met Greek or Roman influences in the city, and met them successfully.

Caps and Gowns

Masters or teachers of the Twelfth century wore gowns because of the cold, chill air of the medieval stone buildings. Hoods were patterned at that time after the learned monks. Eventually the cap and gown became the symbol of the master and the custom of wearing them at graduation is said to have originated in France about the time the degree system was inaugurated. It marked the admission of the student to the ranks of the masters. This custom became so popular in our country that many high schools adopted it for graduation.

Audubon Societies

The purpose of the National Association of Audubon Societies is to arouse the public conscience for preserving the wild birds and animals of the country, to secure protection at all times for the valuable non-game birds, and for game birds or animals threatened with extermination, and to encourage people to become acquainted with the wild life about them.

POLIOMYELITIS SERUM

At a meeting of physicians at Mills Hospital, June 17, the writer was asked to answer some of the questions which are being asked most frequently regarding pooled adult serum for the prevention of poliomyelitis. There is nothing original in the following answers; on the contrary, they represent a consensus of authorities on public health and medicine:

1. At least six out of ten of any large number of adults have immune bodies in their blood serum (protective substances against poliomyelitis). This may be proved by the protection of susceptible animals (monkeys) against infection by poliomyelitis after serum has been administered.

2. Pooling serum consists of putting together serum drawn from a number of individuals for the purpose of protection against poliomyelitis.

A sufficient safety factor to offset accidental variations is reached by pooling the blood of at least ten adults.

3. Under present conditions, it is impossible to use any individual pools. Donors will both contribute to and draw from the general pool, the only exception being parents who wish to furnish serum for their own children without Wassermann test or other laboratory tests for sterility, such pooling of parents' blood may be safe enough in some cases, but will not furnish the probability of protection that pooled serum will do, because of the possibility of both parents belonging to the minority who have no immunity against poliomyelitis.

4. Before serum is added to the pool, the donor (one who gives blood) must be given a Wassermann test and the serum must be examined in other ways to show freedom from any infectious element.

5. From the given quantity of blood is derived 40 per cent to 45 per cent of serum (the liquid part of the blood after the corpuscles have been removed by clotting or centrifuging).

6. The protective value of this pooled adult serum is fully as great as pooled serum from persons who are known to have had poliomyelitis.

7. Preventive doses of pooled adult serum should be given at least once each month for three months during the epidemic and oftener in case of definite exposure.

8. We cannot promise absolute protection from such preventive doses. There has never been an epidemic where enough children were given such serum to prove anything beyond question.

9. Is it worth while to give serum without more evidence? The best

N. R. A. COMMITTEE ORGANIZES AND ELECTS OFFICERS

The new Local N. R. A. Committee met, Wednesday evening, at the City Hall Auditorium for the purpose of organization and election of officers.

W. H. Clay was made permanent chairman; R. T. McHale, vice chairman; John J. Fahey, secretary; Joseph Boltri, A. Sordelli, Peter Pavlos, Fred Mather and C. A. Anderson will act as the executive committee.

This committee has been appointed and organized under directions and instructions from General Hugh S. Johnson, administrator at Washington, and his assistant, Charles F. Honer.

This committee forms the nucleus of a much larger committee and will be augmented if and when occasion requires. For the present its activities will be confined to carrying on a local program for public information and education concerning the achievements and aims of the National Recovery Administration and the principles of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

answer we can give is that every physician we know is giving it to his own children. Certainly there is no better protection generally available.

10. No one, rich or poor, should expect to be able to buy, or beg, serum for his own children unless he can provide enough donors from among his family or friends to supply that amount of serum.

11. Money has been appropriated this week to provide for the preparation of pooled adult serum at the Community Hospital.

Please do not telephone or write to ask when and at what price, etc. this serum will be available.

The community will be notified through the press the moment the new supply is ready.

MERRIAM WILL CLOSE SAN FRANCISCO AND LOS ANGELES OFFICES SOON

A plan to close the governor's offices here and in Los Angeles will be made within two weeks, acting Governor Frank F. Merriam declared in Sacramento as he prepared to leave for a southern California visit Tuesday.

"Business in the two branch offices is negligible when the governor is in Sacramento, so there is no need of maintaining office forces there," he declared, according to International News Service. A saving of between $5000 and $6000 annually will be saved by the move.

YOUNG SON PASSES

Raymond T. Dillon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Dillon of Knowles avenue, passed away at the family home Tuesday morning after a long illness.

Raymond, who was 15 years of age, leaves a sister and three brothers besides his parents to mourn his loss.

Funeral services were held Thursday morning from the funeral chapel of the United Undertakers in San Francisco.

A requiem high mass was celebrated for the repose of his soul at Our Lady of Perpetual Help Church in Daly City. Interment was in Holy Cross cemetery.
